

The complete bibliography of Jean Gottmann

Luca Muscarà

The author is associate professor of geography at the Università degli Studi del Molise, Italy, and teaches at the GIS Masters Program of the Università di Roma La Sapienza. He holds a doctorate in political geography from the Università di Trieste (1998) and is dottore in lettere at the Università di Venezia (1985). Visiting professor at the University of California Los Angeles (2000, 2001), he is co-editor of Sistema Terra and is a member of the editorial board of Cybergeog, European Journal of Geography in Paris. He has translated Gottmann into Italian and is writing a book on the subject.

Jean Gottmann was an indefatigable writer throughout his whole life. Michael Berchin, his stepfather, was a journalist and editor of the most read Russian newspaper outside Russia in Paris while he grew up and was studying at the Sorbonne. And Bernice Adelson Gottmann, his wife, was editor at Life magazine in New York. Gottmann wrote mostly for academic journals, but also for two governments and for the UN during and after the war. During his academic transhumance, he often supported himself with his books and his writing. Of the huge amount of letters he wrote to thousands of correspondents, 22,000 pages are located and catalogued at the BnF, in Paris.

Here, Gottmann's geographic literature is represented. It spans over 60 years of activity – between 1933 and 1994 – and is composed of almost 400 titles, about 30 of which are books. Published mostly in French and English, his writings have been translated into 14 languages including Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, Tamil, Dutch, Turkish, Slovenian, Japanese, Polish, Yiddish, German and modern Greek.

Jean Gottmann's first official bibliography – covering his writings between 1933 and 1984 – was published in John Patten (ed.), 1983, The Expanding City, Essays in Honour of Professor Jean Gottmann, London, New York, Academic Press, pp. xvii-xxxv.

The same bibliography is entirely reprinted, with just one addition relative to 1983, in his volume of the same year: The Coming of the Transactional City, published in College Park by the University of Maryland's Institute for Urban Studies.

A selection of his publications dedicated to urban geography between 1949 and 1987 can be found in Jean Gottmann and Robert Harper, 1990, Since Megalopolis, the Urban Writings of Jean Gottmann, Baltimore and London, Johns Hopkins University Press, pp. 269-280.

Thanks to the opening of the Fonds Gottmann, at the Bibliothèque Nationale de France (Département des Cartes et Plans) it was possible to verify his entire bibliography on the same notebook where Gottmann kept note of his own publications.

Finally, the information in this bibliography was compared to the one available from the indexes of those thematic volumes that are selections of previously published essays from different scientific journals. In particular Etudes sur l'Etat d'Israel (1958), Essais sur l'aménagement de l'espace habité (1966), La città invincibile (1983) and Since Megalopolis (1990).

We would like to thank Jean-Yves Sarazin, curator of the Fonds Gottmann at the Bibliothèque Nationale de France in Paris, for his kind re-reading of the complete bibliography. An online version was published by Cybergeog in 1998 (No. 64, 27.11.98, 28 p.) and is available at:

We would also like to invite the reader who may be informed of recent and/or posthumous publications of Jean Gottmann – not included in this list – to contact the author.
